

Album Review - Fraser - A Garden At The Top Of The Tree

Finally, it's here! Fraser's debut album, 'A Garden At The Top Of The Tree', is finally being released for all you lovely GR readers (and your family and friends) to enjoy. If you've been to a Fraser gig or checked out their Myspace you'll know how catchy, heartfelt and generally enjoyable this music is. This is a fantastic indie-pop masterclass, full of heartwarming melodies, passionate, earthy and soulful vocals, and catchy singalong lyrics for you to sing back at Fraser's gigs. Every song's a winner, from the pop-rock hooks of first single 'Lay It On The Line' to the lilting and wistful 'Laughter', the Beatles-esque 'Bouboulina Sunshine', and every other song in between. I've found the album best enjoyed in the spring sunshine that's finally starting to arrive, and with so much more sun on the horizon (we hope) 'A Garden At The Top Of The Tree' is the perfect soundtrack for a new season, and the next, and the next, and the next..... Check out the band's Myspace page here for more information. Enjoy! :)

About the Author

Leon is the guitarist and composer for post-jazz band Auras And Fireworks. He holds a Higher Diploma in Contemporary Music Performance from the world-renowned Academy of Contemporary Music, teaches guitar in the Guildford area, and can be contacted at leonteachesguitar@live.co.uk

Source: <http://www.gigreviewer.com>